Government Affairs Experts

Dear Friend:

Memorial Day... aside from the burgers and brews and barbeques, we remember those who have served our country and lost their lives. The corridors of the Cannon House Office Building commemorate those who have died in the ten years of war in Afghanistan and beyond. Like sentries, their young faces are posted on easels outside the offices of numerous members of Congress. The call to withdraw troops from Afghanistan grew a bit louder last week as a bipartisan vote called for troop withdrawal.

“Many of our greatest problems are not halfway around the world, they are halfway down the block. And rather than nation building in Afghanistan, we need to do some more nation building right here in the US.” Rep. Jim McGovern, Floor Statement 5/26/2011. The measure failed.

NY Special Election Defeat, The Republican Achilles Heel?

By Carl Chancellor

Just when it seemed that there was no stopping the GOP juggernaut, with Republicans aggressively pushing their political agenda in state houses across the country and on the Hill, the Empire State struck back.

The upset victory of Kathy Hochul, a Democrat in one of New York's most conservative Congressional districts, last month turned mainly on one issue—Medicare reform.

The Debt Ceiling Debate, From Washington To Wall Street

By Scott Orr

The raging fight over the need to raise the federal government's debt ceiling may, at first blush, look like your typical game of political brinksmanship, with the Republicans and Democrats drawing lines in the sand and waiting for the other to blink.

But there is another player in this high stakes game, one that could help shape the 2012 elections and the future of both parties. Wall Street ...

GOP Presidential Hopefuls Reflect The Party's Move To The Right

By Carl Chancellor

Like the classic Abbott and Costello routine "Who's on First," keeping up to the minute with the ever changing line-up of Republican presidential wannabes will challenge even the most ardent political watcher.

It wasn't so long ago that Donald Trump was all the political rage. That was, of course, before the human publicity machine "fired" himself and bowed out of the race. Likewise, Mississippi Gov. Haley Barbour, Indiana Gov. Mitch Daniels, and former Arkansas Gov. and Fox News host Mike Huckabee, all once highly touted as possible Republican nominees, withdrew their names from consideration.
